The browser's developer tools are open, specifically the Elements and Styles tabs. The Elements tab shows the HTML structure:

```
<!doctype html>
<html lang="en">
  <head>...</head>
  <body>

        Col 1
        Col 2 == $0
        Col 3

      Row 2
    </body>
</html>
```

The Styles tab displays the CSS rules applied to the selected element. The current rule is 'element.style {'. Below it is a list of Bootstrap's grid classes (e.g., .col-1, .col-2, ..., .col-12) with their corresponding widths and bootstrap.css file paths. Further down are rules for the user agent stylesheet and the body element.

Selected CSS rules in the Styles tab:

- .col-1, .col-2, .col-3, .col-4, .col-5, .col-6, .col-7, .col-8, .col-9, bootstrap.css:633
